The Broadcasting Yearbook 1991

THE BROADCASTING YEARBOOK 1991 shares with its predecessors the distinction of being the most comprehensive directory to the Fifth Estate. It covers the history and continuing growth of every field in the industry. To acquaint readers with the structure of the Yearbook, and to assist in locating information, the editors have provided a condensed guide to each of the nine major sections: The Fifth Estate, Radio, Television, Cable, Satellites, Programing, Advertising and Marketing, Technology, and Professional Services. In addition, the comprehensive alphabetical index begins on the following page. The general index is followed by an index to advertisers in the 1991 YEARBOOK. These are grouped according to service. Finally, each of the nine sections has a complete index on the first page of the section.

Note: Dollar volume figures represent total considerations reported for all transactions with exception of minority interest transfers in which control of stations did not change hands and stations sold as part of larger company transactions. Although all sales have been approved by FCC, they may not necessarily have reached final closing. Prior to 1978, combined AM-FM facility was counted as one station in computing total number of stations traded. Now AM-FM combinations are counted as two stations.

*Figures represent group deals involving combinations of radio and TV stations, multiple TV stations or multiple radio stations. In 1985, mergers of large groups with collateral interests could not be evaluated, since individual stations were not broken out of larger sales.

is much more common. The usable frequency spectrum has constantly expanded upward with developing technology, so that what were once "high" frequencies are near the low end of the total spectrum used. AM stations are assigned at 10 khz intervals beginning at 540 khz, providing 107 frequencies.

FM broadcasting occupies the frequencies from 88 to 108 mhz, with 100 channels of 200 khz width each, the lowest 20 of them reserved for educational use. Both the center frequency (e.g., "93.1 mhz") and the designated channel number from 201 to 300 are used (e.g., "channel 201" is "88.1 mhz"), although channel numbers are not in popular usage since they are not on FM receivers.

In television, where wider channels are required to carry both picture and sound, each channel is 6 mhz wide. The very high frequency (VHF) portion of the television service occupies the frequencies 54 to 72 mhz (channels 2, 3 and 4), 76 to 88 mhz (channels 5 and 6) and 174 to 216 mhz (channels 7 through 13). The ultra high frequency (UHF) portion of the television service occupies the frequencies from 470 to 890 mhz (channels 14 through 83). Designated channel numbers identify the frequency assignments (e.g., 54-60 mhz is "Channel 2"). There is no "channel 1" in television.

Although "AM" and "FM" are often used to refer to the standard broadcast and FM broadcast services, these terms more properly apply to the methods, "amplitude modulation" and "frequency modulation," used to impress aural or visual intelligence on the carrier wave. The "AM" principle is used not only in the standard broadcast service but also in the picture portion of television and in the international "shortwave" service. The "FM" principle is used both in the FM broadcast service and in the sound portion of television.

In all the broadcast services, the same aural or visual channel can be used in different places if the stations are far enough apart not to interfere with one another or with stations on adjacent or technically related channels. A TV station may be required to "offset" 10 khz above or below its normal carrier frequency. The channel assigned to such a station is then designated "plus" or "minus" as the case may be. This makes more TV assignments possible and reduces the possibility of interference.

AM and FM systems--Without being too technical, this is how an aural station works:

A person talks into a microphone as if it were a telephone. His voice sets up vibrations of varying intensity and frequency. The lower the pitch the slower the vibration. A cycle, or wavelength, is one complete performance of a vibration.

In the microphone, these vibrations are converted into electrical impulses which are then greatly amplified at the transmitter before being put on the "carrier" wave. The intensity and frequency of the carrier wave are constant. This wave, by itself, does not transmit music or speech, so it is varied to correspond with fluctuations of the speech or music received at the microphone. This is called "modulation."

In AM broadcast, the audio waves are impressed on the carrier wave in a manner to cause its amplitude (or power) to vary with the audio waves. The frequency of the carrier remains constant. This is known as amplitude modulation. In frequency modulation (FM), the amplitude remains unchanged but the frequency is varied in a manner corresponding to the voice or music to be transmitted.

These modulated waves radiate from the antenna tower at approximately 186,000 miles per second (the speed of light). Some of them follow the contour of the ground and are called "groundwaves." Others dart upward and are called "skywaves." At night, the skywave portions of transmissions in the standard broadcast (AM) frequencies are reflected back to earth by electrical particles in the "ionosphere" portion of the atmosphere. This gives the listener a choice of more distant AM stations at night, but also increases interference. Daytime reception is largely dependent upon groundwaves.

Radio waves may pass through buildings and other objects but are subject to absorption or interference. As in the case of ripples on water, radio vibrations weaken with distance. Seasonal disturbances and sunspot periods can throw them off course and cause "freak" reception.

AM broadcast stations use "medium waves." That is to say, they transmit 540,000 to 1,600,000 waves a second, or 540 to 1600 Khz. At 540,000 waves a second, the distance between waves is approximately 1,800 feet.

The so-called "shortwave" (international long-distance) broadcast stations transmit in the frequency range 6 mhz to 25 mhz. These waves are sent out one after another so rapidly that the distance between their crests (wave length) is only about 37 to 150 feet.

FM and TV stations, broadcasting in the very high and ultra high frequencies, send out even shorter, or very short, waves. (The word "shortwave" came into use be-

A short course in broadcasting, 1991

There were 10,794 radio stations operating in the United States at the end of 1990. Of these, 4,984 were commercial AM's, 4,372 were commercial FM's and 1,438 were noncommercial FM's. There were 1,469 operating television stations: 552 commercial VHF's, 563 commercial UHF's, 125 noncommercial VHF's and 229 noncommercial UHF's. Most commercial TV's are network affiliated; approximately 469 operate as independents.

No single entity may own more than 12 stations in each service (AM, FM or TV). In TV, the entity is permitted to own 12 TV stations as long as they don't reach more than 25% of the nation's television homes. UHF's are assessed for only half of a market's television homes. Group broadcasters who buy interests in stations more than half owned by minorities are able to own up to 14 stations in a service, and are able to reach 30% of the nation's television households through their TV's, as long as two of the stations in each service are controlled by minorities. Newspaper owners may no longer purchase broadcast properties in the same market, nor may radio station owners acquire TV stations there, nor TV owners radio outlets. TV stations may no longer acquire cable TV franchises in the same city, and networks may not own cable systems at all.

In 1989, according to estimates by the Television Bureau of Advertising and the Radio Advertising Bureau, commercial broadcasting had total advertising revenues of approximately $29.7 billion. Television advertising accounted for $21.3 billion (71.7%) of revenues; radio advertising, for approximately $8.4 billion (28.3%). Public broadcasting had a 1989 income of $1.55 billion_17% from the federal government.

In 1989 television billings for stations and networks amounted to $9,600,000,000 (national network), $5,400,000,000 (national non-network), $5,000,000,000 (local), and $1,300,000,000 (national syndication), according to estimates by the Television Bureau of Advertising. The Radio Advertising Bureau estimated radio billings for stations and networks were $427,000,000 (national network), $1,530,000,000 (national non-network), and $6,463,000,000 (local).

There are more than 92 million U.S. homes (98% of all homes) with television sets, about 65% of which have more than one set. About 90 million homes have color. It is estimated that about 74.5% of TV homes are equiped with a VCR, and that about 58.5% are linked with cable systems, according to Arbitron Television. (Further data on cable TV appears in "A short course in cable, 1991" on page D-3.) There are an estimated 541 million radio sets in the U.S., 349 million (65%) of them in homes and 192 million (35%) out of homes.

The average American home watches TV for six hours and 55 minutes a day, according to Nielsen Media Research statistics for the 1989-1990 season. And the latest study by The Roper Organization (commissioned by the Television Information Office) shows that 65% of the U.S. public turns to TV as the source of most of its news, and that 49% ranks it as the most believable news source.

The average 30-second prime-time network television announcement now costs $100,000 (spots on a top-rated series cost $300,000; low-rated spots average about $80,000). An estimated 118 million people watched the 1991 Super Bowl telecast. Thirty-second announcements during that event cost $800,000. Thirty-second announcements on individual TV stations range from $20,000 in top-rated specials in major markets to as low as $10 in the second-hundred markets. Radio spots costs from $1,000 or more in major markets to less than a dollar in small towns.

Group Ownership

Group Ownership

Listed here are individuals and companies with multiple station holdings. Included are all those controlling three or more radio stations and/or two or more television stations. FCC rules limit multiple ownership to 12 AM stations, 12 FM stations and 12 television stations, as long as the 12 TV stations don't reach more than 25% of the nation's television homes. UHF's are assessed for only half of a market's television homes. Group broadcasters may own up to 14 stations in a service if two of the stations in each service are controlled by minorities. Ownership of cable TV systems, as reported by these stations, is also listed. Unless otherwise noted, the first station listed is group headquarters.
